TRAVELS ABROAD.

LETTER FROM PARIS

Friend Emerson:

We left London about 9 a. m. for Paris by way of the New Haven and Dieppe route. This route, although about four hours crossing the channel, is fast becoming popular. The sea is not so choppy, and the passage on the steamer was like crossing the San Francisco bay for steadiness, and we arrived in Paris about 8 a. m. next morning. The custom house officers did not examine our luggage, but took our statement we had nothing of dutiable nature. They are very particular about matches, and can compel you to pay one franc duty on each match, so matches are very dear in France, so are cigars and tobacco. We got comfortably settled in Rue Duphot about a block from the Madeleine, and when the shower let up we strolled down the Boulevard Madeleine and Italiens, which are like Kearney street as a popular stroll, only very much wider and longer. This is the first city we struck that for style, life and vim, reminded us of San Francisco only on a much larger scale, to describe which we are in the same fix as the poet who wrote:

When I take pen in hand to write
The golden words of sights delight
That all the happy day within
My head have made a merry din
On flashing pinions they take flight,
And leave me only as of old,
Words spiritless, outworn and cold,
And so this paper, white as curds,
I stain with dull and somber words
Instead of singing words of gold.

We did most of our getting around the city on the hurricane deck of the buses, motor buses, and trains. The trains use either steam or fuel. Alcohol as gasoline is high here, so is electric power.

The first place we viewed was the St. Magdelen church, or Madeleine as it is popularly designated. It is an immense rectangular building with rows of heavy stone columns all around it, and without windows except in the roof. Inside it is magnificent, with marble statuary, painting and gilding. Although the principal altar is dedicated to St. Magdelen, the one of the Virgin is the most ornate and popular, judging by the devotees. The Cathedral of Notre Dame, although fine in a way and made popular by Hugo's writing of the "Hunchback of Notre Dame," does not begin to compare with some of the English Cathedrals. Its fine rose or round windows, which are old, and its other modern windows are its chief beauties. Not far from this is the church of St. Genevieve, which contains her remains and shrine, which is of course beautiful and has a continual string of devotees, and within a stone's throw is the famous Pantheon or Temple of Fame, in which some of France's most celebrated men were buried. It is on elevated ground and the dome being over 270 feet high, it is quite a conspicuous object from all over the city. Its interior is decorated with fine statuary and paintings, also the finest Gobelin tapestry we have been fortunate to see. Except the chapel at the tomb of Napoleon, these were all the churches we visited.

Napoleon's tomb is magnificent in its simplicity. The sarcophagus is an immense piece of polished dark red granite on an almost black base, the whole set in a sort of well, with statues and battle flags around it. The building contains also the tombs of Joseph and Jerome Bonaparte, and one of Napoleon's generals who had stood with him through all. The inscriptions on all the monuments and tombs we have seen in France are plain and to the point.

In going back and forth we crossed the Seine over a number of its bridges, the finest being "The Nicholas," named after Czar of Russia. We also several times passed the July Column at the place of the old Bastille, and the Vendome Column, and many fine bronze monuments at intersections of streets in various parts of the city, and they all stand in fine open places. The finest open space is the "Place de la Concorde." It is grand and is the beginning of the "Champs Elysees," the grandest Boulevard of all to the Arc de Triumphant, and continuing on as the Boulevard de Armees. On the other side of the Place de la Concorde is the Tuilleries a fine park with another Arc de Triumphant in front of the Louvre. The sight of this stretch from the top of the Arch at the upper end of the Champs Elysees is magnificent, and from this point, the Place de l'Etoile, the boulevards radiate in every direction like spokes of a wheel. This is about the best job Napoleon did for Paris, straightened some of her crooked streets. This Arc on a slight elevation is 160 feet high and 264 steps lead to the top. It takes some hard breathing and leg work to get there, but it's worth the trouble to get the view. By the way some of the chestnut trees on the boulevards are getting a second crop of blossoms and leaves. The Louvre Palace with its art galleries and museum is a wonder of long richly decorated halls and rooms, you can walk till weary and not see half. We imagined we had seen some of the finest before we saw this, but so far nothing can compare with the Louvre for greatness and splendor.

One could spend a week or two seeing this one place alone. Most of the finest paintings in France are here, as well as statuary, ancient Egyptians, Greek, Romans and other works of art and curios gathered by Napoleon during his wars. The bedrooms are open to the public, but we only went into that of the Empress. There are also two crowns, a diamond hilted sword, the famous Kohinoor diamond, some fine rubies, ancient gold and silver jewelry on exhibition, guarded of course.

The Luxembourg Palace Art Gallery is also fine, but small. There are several more museums here, but we were satisfied with seeing the best, and one becomes weary of seeing antiquities unless making it a study.

The next sight is the Eiffel Tower and the Ferris wheel, not far from the Trocadero, with fine parks around each. The Grand Opera House is truly grand, and the Opera Comique also, the latter had "Madame Butterfly" staged, but it was not comic and only four singers with a small chorus that appeared only once.

A visit to the Bourse or stock exchange will show a large crowd of excited speculators and a massive building. The Palais Royal is an immense arcade of shops or stores covering several blocks.

As we did not get into the country we don't know anything of how people live and die, except what we saw from the car windows. Here women work in the fields, and in the city even the cabs are being driven by women. It's an innovation and the old cabbies and boys guy and josh them as they drive along. The women have to help support the family of the working classes, for it takes a great many men to wear the uniform of the grand army. Officers and men go around with their side arms or sabers dangling at their heels, what for we don't know. There is no money in sight and they were not on duty. Probably they must always be ready for any emergency.

Hotel and restaurant prices are about the same as in America, you pay for everything you get, including bread and napkins also charged. In England napkins are seldom seen in restaurants. Considering our lack of knowledge of the language we got along first rate, everyone being willing to give all information possible. Sometimes we did more walking than would have been necessary could we have understood better. Crossing the streets one must keep sharp lookout for there is no regard for foot passengers, and at only a few very difficult crossings do the police stop traffic occasionally. This is managed better in New York and London. The streets are well kept and well cleaned by washing water being in good supply, but baths in hotels are a rarity and specially advertised if to be had and charged if used about 75c with use of soap and towel. There is a strange custom in England and on the continent in regard to baths. The swimming or pool baths are of two classes, first and second class. The first class the most, of course, for the water is only used one day or so, and then it is used for second class for a day or two. What becomes of it then we do not know, probably, used for fertilizing. Tub baths in England are called slipper baths and the water only used once, and the water is turned in for you as much as is necessary, and then shut off and the handle of the faucet taken away.

The stores of Paris are about the same as in all large cities while here they have three very large ones on the Emporium style, selling everything. They are the Bon Marché, Louvre Magazine and Prim Temp in different parts of the city, and all really have some employees who speak English, although in many stores advertising so, the clerk is always out. For the benefit of the ladies, tell them that the hats are very large with enormous bunches of roses, cock's feathers and plumes of all colors, purple and green predominating. Button shoes very long and pointed are also the proper thing, the balance of style we can't describe from lack of scientific knowledge. There are many things we could write about, but this will do for the present, so with our usual good wishes to you, we are, as ever,
Yours,

OUR AUKUM LETTER

Nov. 3.—Sam Kasper while working in the Helm mine, met with a serious accident one day last week. He and John Forbes were working at the bottom of the shaft, John Brumfield was tending the whip. The men at the bottom called to him to lower the bucket. He put the bucket on to the hook, and from some cause he was unable to catch it or hold it with the break. It went to the bottom with a crash, breaking Kasper's arm just above the wrist. I understand that Mr Helm will now put on a whim and do away with the whip.

Miss Lizzie Uhlinger has returned to her home from Sacramento, where she has been for some time. Her many friends welcome her home.

Chas. S. Bell and William Burns paid Sacramento a visit for a few days last week. They report the city booming.

Miss Mabel Votaw attended the Institute at Sacramento city week before last. From what she says she was highly pleased with her trip, and fascinated by the glow and glare of the capital city.

The quail hunters were out in full force from the banging of the guns today. At times it sounded like a salvo of musketry. This may be slightly figurative, but the boys did a great deal of shooting, but it is safe to say that they stayed within the limit.

If I had a trombone I would blow a blast into the midst of the supervisors of Amador and El Dorado counties, and ask what has become of their intention of constructing a new bridge across the Cosumnes close to Aukum. Wonder if they are like the "Arkansas traveler," and think they don't need it now, and when it rains it will be too wet to construct it. If they wait till the winter freshets set in they will need a flying machine to aid them in its construction. The supervisors of the two counties have good intentions in the matter, but if they stretch those intentions too much the people of Aukum will have to swim to get across the river, or the people on the south side will have to engage one of those aerial wonders to scow them across the rush of sometimes maddening waters. Gentlemen the taxpayers of Aukum and vicinity await with keen interest your good intention in the matter.

I learned just a moment ago that Mrs Greenslate, who has been for some time quite sick, died this morning. I extend my kindest and sincere sympathy to the bereaved family.
Giddy Dick.

Committed for Insanity.

George H. Peterson was brought over from Sutter Creek this week, and examined on a charge of insanity. The examination was held Wednesday before superior judge Rust, Drs. Endicott and Gall being the attending physicians. The witnesses examined were Charles Eggleston, Mrs Eliza Eggleston, Henry Hayden and constable T. S. Tuttle. The unfortunate man is 35 years of age, the son of Arthur N. Peterson, an old resident and well-known millman of Sutter Creek. His actions, as brought out at the examination, showed not only an unbalanced mind, but that he was dangerous to be at large. It is said that he had attacked his aged father, who is over 74 years of age, with a knife, threatening to kill him; also that he had talked wildly to children. Peterson was committed to Napa asylum in 1900, and was there for eight months, his mental condition being so far improved that he was discharged. But his derangement has returned in as dangerous a form as before. He was again committed to the insane asylum at Napa. Sheriff Gregory left yesterday morning to deliver him to the authorities there.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS

HON. R. C. RUST, JUDGE.

Caroline Beatrice Thomas vs. Joseph Alford Thomas.—Complaint filed and summons issued.

T. J. Carr vs. N. W. Orr et al.—This is a suit concerning the application for purchasing certain school lands in Amador county. Defendant Orr filed an application in the state land office October 13, 1902, for section 36 township 8 range 16, containing 640 acres. On April 10 following he filed an abandonment of a portion of said land, to wit E 1/2 of S W 1/4, S E 1/4 and N 1/2 of said section. The surveyor general issued his approval of the portion unabandoned, being the W 1/2 of S W 1/4, and thereafter notified the applicant to make payment therefor to the treasurer of Amador county within fifteen days. On the 13th of April 1903, the defendant filed an application in the state land office for the E 1/2 of S W 1/4, S E 1/4 and N 1/2 Sec. 36 township 8 range 16, 560 acres, and September following abandoned the S E 1/4 and N 1/2 of said section. He was required to pay for the land within fifty days to the county treasurer; and has failed to make payment. In March 1907, plaintiff applied to purchase the S W 1/4 of said section 36, and filed at the same time a contest and protest against the application of Orr, which contest has been referred to the superior court of Amador for determination, hence this suit. Geo. I. Witter is attorney for plaintiff.

The McCutchen Insolvency Matter.

A meeting was held in Sacramento on 31st, before referee Chas. A. Bliss, concerning matters relating to the bankruptcy proceedings of J. McCutchen, formerly of the Jackson Shoe Store. A first dividend of 12 1/2 cents was declared. The claims of Mr Rosenberg for the whole of the stock in the branch store, next to Thomas' butcher shop, amounting to $2400 was withdrawn, also the judgment obtained for damages against McCutchen for failure to subscribe for certain stock in a mercantile firm headed by Rosenberg, which was to start in Woodland, amounting to $1500. McCutchen agreed to take $1500 in the concern, only a short time before he was attached. Judgment was obtained by default after McCutchen was attached, none of the other creditors knowing anything about it until after the judgment was secured. All the other creditors were determined to contest the allowance of this claim. It was withdrawn on a compromise, Mr Rosenberg being permitted to take back his stock in the branch store, on condition of withdrawing the two claims amounting to $3900. While all the money has been received from the assets the matter cannot be closed until after a year has elapsed, to give ample opportunity for all claims to be presented. The estate will probably pay about 30 cents on the dollar.

Mrs Tallon's Father Dies.

H. S. Tallon left for San Francisco Wednesday on account of the death of his wife's father, Frederick Michel, who died in that city November 3. The deceased was a native of Germany, aged 65 years, 2 months and one day. Mrs Tallon was unable to go down, as she is just recovering from an attack of typhoid fever, and is still in the care of her sister, who came up to nurse her. The funeral of deceased took place yesterday. He was a member of Harmony Lodge I. O. O. F., and the remains were cremated at the crematory of that order. He leaves a widow and seven children—two sons and five daughters, two of whom are married.

THE DEPRECIATION OF GOLD.

Gold is universally looked upon as the most stable in value of all metals or commodities. It is the accepted standard of value for all other articles. While other things fluctuate in value, gold remains stationary. It takes the same amount of the yellow metal to make a twenty-dollar gold piece to-day as it did twenty or thirty years ago. It has been crowned king of metals, and selected as the basis from which to estimate the value of everything else. Probably it will never be dethroned from its position of preeminence. It possesses certain characteristics which make it better fitted as the medium of exchange than any other commodity. The general impression is that gold is not subject to fluctuation in accordance with the law of supply and demand; that no matter whether the production be above or below the average, its value as money is not in the least affected.

But this position is hardly tenable. Gold is as much subject to the law of supply and demand as other things, although the fluctuation is manifested in a somewhat different way.

The world's gold output has increased enormously of late years. During the last generation the supply has nearly doubled. But it still continues to be coined into money at the same ratio. It would be illogical, however, to argue from this that gold is unaffected by this very plentifulness. Gauged by its purchasing power—and that is the proper way to gauge it—a twenty-dollar gold piece will not go as far to-day as it would a few years back. Prices have gone skyward all along the line. Wages in every department of labor have risen from 25 to 30 per cent. Some may attribute this to the work of the labor unions. No doubt these organizations have largely contributed to that end, but not entirely, nor even mainly. About everything else has gone up in a corresponding ratio—with one notable exception, namely, gold or money. Rates of interest for the use of money have been on the down grade during all this period of flush times. Years ago eight and ten per cent were ordinary rates of interest; now five and six per cent are deemed top rates for safe investment. The enormous increase in gold output has stimulated almost every branch of human industry to an extent never before experienced in the history of the world. An extraordinary demand for labor has been thereby created, and naturally the laborers have exacted the best terms possible for their capital—labor. Practically, therefore, the effect has been precisely the same as though gold had actually declined, and all other commodities had remained stationary.

The business of gold mining feels the adverse effect of this condition of affairs almost exclusively. The miner gets no more than formerly for his standard product. On the other hand, he has to pay more for everything he uses. Timber, fuel, machinery, and above all, labor, cost considerably more than they did a few years back. Every quartz operator has learned by experience that he is handicapped by conditions as they now are. His operating expenses are very much enhanced, at the same time he is barred from raising the price of his product. This, however, is in strict accordance with the law of supply and demand. It tends to regulate the supply to conform to the demand. The communities dependent upon low-grade ores are naturally the first to feel the effect. In periods of general prosperity, capital finds inviting fields for investment outside of mining; in times of depression capital drifts to gold mining as offering superior inducements.

The administration has wisely concluded not to call an extra session of congress to take steps to relieve the financial tightness. The remedy proposed—increase of the currency—is a questionable remedial measure. There is plenty of money in the country now. The trouble is, it is in hiding. There is an impression abroad that it is better locked up than used in the usual avenues of investment. To load up the country with an extra dose of promises to pay in the shape of currency, will not remove that impression. The policy of trying to curb great aggregations of capital commonly called trusts, is more responsible for the distrust than all other causes combined. Hundreds of thousands of small capitalists have their money invested in the securities of these concerns, they become frightened when their securities are attacked, hoard up idle cash, and a panic is on. It is all right to exercise a reasonable control over the trusts, but in a direct attack the innocent small investors are the principal sufferers.

THE PREY OF A GRIZZLY.

By a Little Oversight Bruin Was Robbed of a Good Meal.

In the early settlement of California grizzly bears were numerous and troublesome, but few men ever had a more singular experience with a grizzly than Paul Sweet, who kept a tannery near Santa Cruz. The story is told by Mrs. Dall in "My First Holiday."

Mr. Sweet was one day walking alone in the woods when he came suddenly upon a grizzly bear and her two cubs. He was quite unarmed, and before he had time to consider any plan of action the bear was upon him. She struck him down, but he kept his presence of mind and lay perfectly quiet.

The grizzly stood over him for a minute or more, then seized him by the wristband and began dragging him along. He did not resist, and she dragged him for a dozen rods to a little sandy hollow, where she dropped him and began digging a hole in the sand. Into this hole she rooted the man, and then nosed and pawed the sand over him until he was buried from sight. The prudent animal, not being hungry at the moment, was making a cache of her prey.

Mr. Sweet's heart lightened as he realized the brute's intentions, and he began to hope that he might escape. He waited a few minutes after the bear had covered him in, and then, thinking that she had retired from the scene, he began to work himself free very cautiously. The grizzly was on the watch, however, and at the first movement of her prey rushed to the spot and with two or three strokes of her paw snugly tucked him in again.

Mr. Sweet instantly became motionless again and allowed himself to be reburied in the sand. Luckily his hat had slipped over his face, so that the sand did not fill his nose and eyes, and by raising his head a little he was able to throw off the sand sufficiently to breathe.

He was more wary next time and lay still for an hour or two until he felt pretty sure that the grizzly had retired from the spot. Very cautiously then he worked himself free from the sand and crept away.

LAPSE OF REASONING.

Instances by Two of the World's Greatest Benefactors.

To illustrate the kind of lapse of reasoning power from which great inventors are known to suffer, like that under influence of which Sir Isaac Newton cut one hole in a wall to let a cat pass through and then a small hole for the kitten, an old story in the life of Morse will answer well. Long before he invented the telegraph Morse was known to the officers of the patent office as a persistent applicant for patents. When his great invention of "distance writing" was about completed he wanted the Baltimore and Ohio Railway company to try it.

To get rid of him the president of the road turned him over to a subordinate. This official was struck with the beauty of the invention and became so interested in it that he sat up half the night discussing it with the inventor. At length Morse confessed there was only one thing which baffled him. "As long as the railroad runs," he said, "where poles may be erected it will be easy sailing, but when we come to the big bridges what is to be done then? We can't erect poles across the stream, and without them the wire would sag and perhaps break from its own weight. I confess I don't know what to do. Can't you suggest a way out of the difficulty?"

"Why don't you fasten the wires to the bridge?" asked his companion without a moment's hesitation. For a moment Morse gazed at him, with open mouth, and then exclaimed: "Why not, indeed? Why, I never thought of that. It's the very way."

The layman's tip put the finishing touch to the work of the great inventor, and thus wires came to be strung on bridges when crossing large streams.

Bismarck's Retort.

One evening when the German troops were before Paris Duke Ernst of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha began grumbling in Bismarck's presence because the iron cross of the first class, given for bravery in the field of battle, had been distributed too indiscriminately. Bismarck replied that the distribution of such decorations was always a delicate and difficult task, "for," said he, "conspicuous merit has to be rewarded, but in some cases conspicuous position, with or without merit, cannot be overlooked. See now," he said. "Moltke has it. Roon has it. Blumenthal has it. Excellent! But," he added, "your highness and I have it, too, and surely it is not for us to grumble!"

An Odd Legacy.

Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the Jefferson family of actors, was remembered curiously in the will of Weston, who was himself an esteemed member of Garrick's company. Weston's will contained this item:

"I have played under the management of Mr. Jefferson at Richmond and received from him every politeness. I therefore leave him all my stock of prudence, it being the only good quality I think he stands in need of."

One of the oldest copies for a reward offered for the apprehension of a criminal is now in the possession of Sheriff Sibley and has been placed in his gallery among his many other curious collections. Ex-sheriff Graves of Calaveras county, while working at his mine in Alpine county, found the copy pasted on an old out of the way cabin. The reward offered was $1000 and was issued by Governor Haight in 1869 for the arrest and conviction of the men who murdered Medina and several others at a wayside house a few miles east of Bellota. The copy had remained on the cabin for thirty-eight years.—Stockton Independent.

About the 9th of November it is announced that a comet of great brilliancy may be seen in the eastern sky from the vicinity of Jackson. It will appear to the best advantage about midnight, and those who care to remain up that late will probably be well repaid for their trouble. This comet was discovered by a young amateur astronomer at the University of Wisconsin, and as soon as the discovery was announced to the world, it caused intense interest, as no comet was due on the celestial time table at this season.

John Dohman and wife have removed to Plymouth, where they will reside in the future.—Placerville Nugget.

Mrs G. H. Dunlap has returned to her home in Ione, after a pleasant visit with Mrs Judge Arnot in this city.—Placerville Nugget.

John McCulloch, an old resident of the Forest Home district, passed away suddenly a few days ago at the summer cattle range. He was 75 years old and had been gathering up cattle during the previous day getting pretty tired. He went to bed at night not feeling very well and was found dead in the morning. He had always been a sturdy, wiry man, and had not been sick to amount to anything during his life. He was the father of Frank S. McCulloch. The old gentleman was well known in this part of the country and had many friends who will be pained to learn of his demise.—Echo.

On Sunday morning last three men who are residents of the Mount Echo district were caught in the act of dragging off four hogs which they had killed. The hogs belonged to William Gibbert and were raised as pets about the house by his wife. The hogs had been shot not far from the house and Mr Gibbert, having his attention attracted by the shots and the barking of the dogs, went out to investigate and found the three men dragging two of the hogs away. Will Gibbert took all three of the men's guns and carried them to his house and put them away. The fellows went after their guns and were refused them until they had paid $150 for the hogs they killed. There had been nine of the hogs and only two of them showed up at the home pen alive. These are not the only hogs that have been missed in that vicinity. It is claimed that one person in that neighborhood has taken hogs to market after dark and sold them. It is rumored that the case for hog killing will be settled by the parties who killed the hogs paying for the dead swine.—Echo.

Mrs Christiana Leach, the widow of the late Amos Leach breathed her last at the residence of her daughter, Mr Gilchrist, Sunday morning at the ripe old age of 89 years, 4 months and 23 days. She had been a resident of Ione for 52 years. She is survived by four generations of descendants. Christiana Wisler was born in Chippewa, Canada, June 4, 1818; was married to Amos Leach June 6, 1836. They and their family crossed the plains to California in 1854 and located in Ione in 1855, since which time this town has been the family home. Mrs Leach was the mother of eleven children, seven of whom, five daughters and two sons, survive her. She leaves also many grandchildren, great-grandchildren and great-great-grandchildren. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon, the services being conducted by Rev. H. W. Dobbins and the interment being in the Ione cemetery.—Echo.

A Pretty Predicament.

The immunity bath which has been extended by Rudolph Spreckels et al, to confessed bribe takers in San Francisco, is covering a multitude of sinners. Ex-supervisor Wilson is one of the number and he is also a member of the State Board of Railroad Commissioners. Governor Gillett said last night that he has twice asked Wilson's resignation but in vain. He has done all he can, he says, without putting the state to large expense, and says that if Wilson's resignation was really desired, the San Francisco graft prosecution could bring it about. The obstacle is that immunity has been granted the supervisor. He has confessed to a felony, the acceptance of bribes, but the only way the state could do anything would be to impeach him through the legislature. "Such a move would cost the state thousands of dollars," says the governor. "A special session of the legislature would have to be called. The man is unable to do anything, and to impeach him under the circumstances would be hardly worth the cost."

The Evans' Case.

Since the appearance of the article in last week's Prospect on the Evans case we have received some information that puts an entirely different aspect upon the case. At present we are not in a position to fully go into the matter, but we shall have more to say when certain investigations now under way are completed. What we wish to do at this time, is to correct some wrong impressions that may have been obtained from our article of last week.

Though at the time of the arrest and conviction of Evans, we are free to say that we were not on friendly terms with the sheriff's office, and took some exceptions to the way the case was managed, we do not intend to do injustice to any one. When the city papers first published the news to the effect that one of the leading prosecutors in the Evans case had made a confession to the effect that he had been railroaded to prison, we, in common with most of the people here, took it for granted that the confession had been made by the late sheriff, B. K. Thorn.

While regarding this as a confirmation of our position taken at the time of the trouble, we refrained from making any comment, till the matter was a subject for general discussion. We know now positively that it was not former sheriff Thorn, that made the confession, and from what we do learn are satisfied that there is no foundation whatever for the story that any new facts have been found tending to show the innocence of Evans. So far as any evidence is concerned the case rests just where it did when the jury declared him guilty.—Prospect.

The State Fair.

There has been no time in the history of California when the prospects and conditions so far in advance, were as favorable for a big state fair the following year as they are now for the fair of 1908. Already six counties and fourteen firms or individuals have made formal application for exhibit space or stall room for next year, and quite a number of representative bodies have notified the secretary of the appointment of committees to consider the matter of preparing a good exhibit from their respective communities for the State Fair of 1908, with the view of utilizing it, or part of it, at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, to be held at Seattle in 1909. The double opportunity to use an exhibit is a double incentive to collect a good one, and these conditions, added to the better general feeling in favor of the state fair, brought about by the success of the last one, and the further advantage of having the fair of 1908 all in one inclosure, with one admission to everything, including amusements, music, races, live stock, machinery and all the beautiful and attractive pavilion displays, give promise today of by far the best state fair next year that California has ever seen.

Heavy Machinery.

The driving shaft of the big dynamo that was completely wrecked in the disaster at the Standard Electric Company's plant at Electra in August last, was so sprung or twisted in that trouble, that it had to be shipped to San Francisco to be straightened. It was sent away last Tuesday, one of Piccardo's big teams doing the hauling from Electra to Martells. It weighed 27,000 pounds. The bridges and culverts between Electra and the depot had to be braced and strengthened for the ordeal. Everything is running smoothly at the plant, with the six dynamos furnishing power. One of the big dynamos put out of commission in August has not been replaced yet, as it takes some months to fill an order for such a machine in the factories in the east.

The big load started from the plant Tuesday, mounted on a truck made specially for such loads, with sixteen animals of Piccardo's best attached thereto. On reaching the grade a quarter of a mile from Big Bar bridge, the king bolt pulled out in some way, letting down the ponderous load with a thud. The truck being low, and very strongly built, there was no serious smash. But it was quite an undertaking to get the front wheels connected again. The accident happened Tuesday afternoon, and it was not until next day that the team was in shape to start again on its journey. The load reached Jackson last evening, and was held near the brewery until this morning, when it was again put in motion, and will no doubt reach the Martell depot to-day.

Burned to Death.

Tuesday morning about eleven Marie Zanna, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Antonio Zanna, of Campo Seco, was so frightfully burned, through her dresses catching fire while playing with matches, that she died in great agony about three in the afternoon. Dr. Phillips was summoned shortly after the accident, but got only as far as Paloma, where he received a telephone that it was too late. The child, which is only four years old, was at a neighbors playing with a little boy. They had procured some matches somewhere and were probably trying to start a fire when her clothes took fire. She at once started on a run for her home, fanning the flames with every step she took, and screaming as she ran. Four grown people, who saw her as she started to run tried to catch her, but she was so badly frightened and in such great pain that she easily outdistanced them. When she got to her home there was hardly a piece of clothing on her.

It is only about a year and a half ago that the Zannas moved to Campo Seco from Sutter Creek, where they had lived for some time and the child was born. Mr. Zanna purchased a store there and shortly after was entirely burned out, but rebuilt it almost immediately. And now comes the greatest misfortune of all—the death of their only child by burning. The funeral was held Thursday afternoon at three o'clock from the Catholic church in Sutter Creek.

A BUSINESS LESSON.

How Peter Cooper Taught One Man the Value of Money.

Peter Cooper was one of the most successful, careful and prudent business men of his time. He was strongly opposed to the methods of many merchants who launched out into extravagant enterprises on borrowed money, for which they paid exorbitant rates of interest. The following anecdote illustrates this point very forcibly:

Once, while talking about a project with an acquaintance, the latter said he would have to borrow the money for six months, paying interest at the rate of 3 per cent per month.

"Why do you borrow for so short a time?" Mr. Cooper asked.

"Because the brokers will not negotiate bills for longer."

"Well, if you wish," said Mr. Cooper, "I will discount your note at that rate for three years."

"Are you in earnest?" asked the would-be borrower.

"Certainly I am. I will discount your note for $10,000 for three years at that rate. Will you do it?"

"Of course I will," said the merchant.

"Very well," said Mr. Cooper. "Just sign this note for $10,000, payable in three years, and give your check for $800, and the transaction will be complete."

"But where is the money for me?" asked the astonished merchant.

"You don't get any money," was the reply. "Your interest for thirty-six months at 3 per cent per month amounts to 108 per cent, or $10,800. Therefore your check for $800 just makes us even."

The force of this practical illustration of the folly of paying such an exorbitant price for the use of money was such that the merchant determined never to borrow at such ruinous rates, and he frequently used to say that nothing could have so fully convinced him as this rather humorous proposal by Mr. Cooper.

HIS RULING PASSION.

Old Harpagon Carried it to the Brink of the Grave.

The following story is commonly related as true in France: Old Harpagon was fast approaching his end. His sufferings were very great, but he comforted himself with the thought that as he could not eat there was so much saved at any rate.

"Well, doctor," he said in a feeble voice, "how long have I yet to live?"

"Only half an hour. Would you like me to send for somebody—a clergyman, for instance?"

Harpagon was silent for a few moments. He passed his hand over his chin, bristling with a grizzled beard of several days' growth, when a sudden thought struck him, and, turning to the doctor, he gasped excitedly:

"Quick—send for a barber!"

The barber soon afterward arrived with his shaving tackle.

Harpagon, whose voice was getting weaker, asked him, "You—charge—two pence—for shaving?"

"That's the price," was the answer.

"And—how much—is it—for shaving—a corpse?"

The barber paused a moment and then said, "Five shillings."

"Then—shave—me—quickly," stammered old Harpagon, casting a feverish glance at the watch which the doctor still held in his hand.

He was too feeble to utter another word, but the doctor understood the mute appeal and said:

"Fifteen minutes more!"

A smile of satisfaction stole over the features of the patient. The barber set to work and in a very short time finished his task notwithstanding the nervous twitchings that distorted the face of the dying man. When the operation was over old Harpagon uttered a sigh of relief and was heard to whisper:

"That's a good thing—four shillings—and tenpence—saved!" And he breathed his last.—London Chronicle.

Sentiment In a Pawnshop.

A watch had just passed from the hands of a seedy young man into those of a pawnbroker. Before the young man got out of the shop the broker called him back.

"Here's a picture—a woman's picture—in the back of this watch," he said. "You'd better take it out."

The young man blushed.

"It isn't worth while," he said. "I'll redeem the thing in a week or two."

"Maybe you will and maybe you won't," retorted the broker. "You never can tell about these things. I may not be strong on sentiment, but one thing I insist on is that no man shall leave a woman's picture in a watch that he pawns here."—New York Press.

Ageless Love.

It is a splendid thing to think that the woman you really love will never grow old to you. Through the wrinkles of time, through the mask of years, if you really love her, you will always see the face you loved and won. And a woman who really loves a man does not see that he grows old. He is not decrepit to her. He does not tremble. He is not old. She always sees the same gallant gentleman who won her hand and heart.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Union In Failure.

Men are united more by their vices than their virtues, observed Balzac. It is also true that they are more closely bound by their failures than their successes. How a man will love you if you have fallen down like himself when perhaps you should both have won out were there any real stuff in you.—Michael Monahan.

True honor leaves no room for hesitation and doubt.—Plutarch.

The Spanish Duchess.

A duchess enters a shop. Do you imagine she will be more courteously received than a little milliner? Not at all, for both are instantly made at home and treated to the Hidalgo's finest manner. But she will never be the less a duchess because she and the shopkeeper are on the best of terms. Her unconsciousness of her rank in everyday relations, which would stupefy an English duchess, comes from the fact that she belongs to a prouder race. Had she a mind to sport her coronet in a shop the owner and his attendants would speedily make short work of her decorative dignity. To them it would simply mean an underbred and foolish exhibition, for impertinence and vulgar haughtiness are not defects the Spaniards will tolerate.—Blackwood's.

An Old Timer.

In an old diary bearing the date of 1775 several pages are devoted to cash accounts. On one of these is a quaintly worded statement, duly witnessed and dated.

The spelling is not particularly commendable, but spelling was an uncertain art in those days and even now is a gift denied to some:

Novem. 23th, 1775.
This is to sartifie to all Parsons home it may Consarne that I have Paid a sushush charge for a redish Colord Surtute with a Biew Velvet Cape, wich I now wair.

One Law Secure.

Officer (as autoist flew down hill, his machine beyond control) — Hi, there! You're breaking the law. Autoist (as he whisked from view)—Well, I ain't breaking the law of gravitation.—Harper's Weekly.

TYBURN TREE.

Lord Ferrers' Tragid Journey to the Famous Old Gallows.

Park lane was Tyburn lane, and it seems as if the gallows—described in an old document as movable—at one time stood at its east corner. It was there the ferocious Lord Ferrers was hung in 1760 for murdering his servant. Horace Walpole's words paint the picture well: "He shamed heroes. He bore the solemnity of a pompous and tedious procession of above two hours from the Tower to Tyburn with as much tranquillity as if he were only going to his own burial, not to his own execution." And when one of the dragoons of the procession was thrown from his horse Lord Ferrers expressed much concern and said, "I hope there will be no death today but mine."

On went the procession, with a mob about it sufficient to make its progress slow and laborious. Small wonder that the age of Thackeray, with Thackeray's help, set up its scaffolds within four high walls. Asking for drink, Lord Ferrers was refused, for, said the sheriff, late regulations enjoined him not to let prisoners drink while passing from the place of imprisonment to that of execution, great indecencies having been committed by the drunkenness of the criminals in the hour of execution. "And though," said he, "my lord, I might think myself excusable in overlooking this order out of regard to your lordship's rank, yet there is another reason, which, I am sure, will weigh with you—your lordship is sensible of the greatness of the crowd; we must draw up at some tavern; the confluence would be so great that it would delay the expedition which your lordship seems so much to desire." But decency—so often paraded by those who outrage it—ended with the murderer's death. "The executioners fought for the rope, and the one who lost it cried—the greatest tragedy, in his thinking, of the day!"—London Sketch.

When to Lift Your Hat.

In answer to the question, "Please tell when and where are, or is, the correct time for a gentleman to lift or remove his hat," we reply: Without consulting authorities of etiquette, in fact giving it to you offhand, so to speak, we should say at the following times and on the following occasions, respectively, the hat should be lifted or removed as circumstances indicate: When mopping the brow, when taking a bath, when eating, when going to bed, when taking up a collection, when having the hair trimmed, when being shampooed, when standing on the head.—Wichita (Kan.) Beacon.

A Curious Anomaly.

Until a few years ago the Philippine Islanders held their Sunday on the day which was Monday to the inhabitants of the neighboring island of Borneo. This curious anomaly arose from the historic fact that the Philippines were discovered by Spanish voyagers coming from the east round Cape Horn, while Borneo was discovered by Portuguese coming from the west, and sailors lose or gain a day according to their direction in crossing the Pacific.

The weather has been all that could be desired for the past week in sunshine and good roads, but clouds have appeared to mar the brightness to-day.

The home of Mr and Mrs Frank Walker was the scene of mirth and good will on Friday evening, the occasion being Hallowe'en and the gathering of forty invited friends. Miss Ethel acted the part of hostess in a pleasing manner. Jack-o-lanterns were numerous throughout the grounds. Weird sounds greeted you on your arrival, and during the evening ghosts appeared, then the fish pond was duly enjoyed, each angler drew out a small paper containing his or her destiny; also the diving for apples and many other interesting features, including tempting cake and coffee of the best, lemonade, sandwiches and fruit. It was after midnight when the throng dispersed with a unanimous wish that these pleasant gatherings may be more frequent.

Amador Pioneer Passes
Away in Oakland.

William R. Story, who was a resident of Amador county in early times, died in Oakland on November 4, at the ripe age of 90 years and four months. He was the father of J. H. Story, who was Wells Fargo's Agent, also Western Union telegraph operator in Jackson for two or three years, and who left here only a few months ago to accept a similar position at Sonora. Mr Story in early days lived in Volcano, and operated the Story gravel claim a few miles from that town. He left here for Oakland in the early seventies, and has resided in the bay city ever since. He was highly thought of by all who had the honor of his acquaintance.

The Oakland Enquirer gives the following notice of deceased:

William R. Story, one of Oakland's oldest inhabitants, well known and for many years active in municipal affairs, died Monday evening at his home, 1226 Chestnut street. Mr Story was born in Illinois in 1817. During his young manhood he spent several years on the Mississippi and tributary rivers and became commander of a river boat. In 1850 he arrived in California, crossing the plains and mountains with a mule team and wagon load of supplies. In 1853 he returned to the East by way of Panama and brought his wife to the coast, making the second trip with ox teams. He engaged successfully in mining in Amador county, where he resided for some years. For the last thirty years he has been a constant resident of Oakland and was at one time agent in charge of the West Oakland sub-station of the postoffice. Mr Story was prominently identified with the Masonic order, having been a Mason for sixty years, and since his residence in Oakland has been a member of Alcatraz Lodge No. 244.

Trip Through Southern California.

We arrived home on Friday evening, Nov. 1st, from a most delightful trip through Southern California, the wonders and beauties of which the half has never been told. Leaving San Francisco on the morning of Oct. 14, on the "Coaster," we had a daylight trip along the coast to Santa Barbara, a most beautiful city by the sea. Here about fifteen hundred members of O. E. S. were in attendance at the grand lodge, which convened at hotel Potter. The four days spent there were taken up with lodge affairs, reception, ball, trip to the old Mission, driving through the beautiful country homes of Montecito, and ending with a tropical luncheon, served on the roof of Japanese tea-gardens by the members of Santa Barbara Chapter O. E. S.

An excursion was then formed to go to Los Angeles of about one hundred and fifty members, where we visited several points of interest, going from there to Riverside and Redlands, where trips were made from each place with autos and carriages through orange groves and bowers, and through avenues where feathery palm trees rise, and beautiful pepper trees loaded with their red berries made our drives never to be forgotten. We were told marvelous stories of the wealth of the millionaires, whose homes and gardens abound in that vicinity.

We next visited the island of Catalina, which is about fifty-one miles from Los Angeles—going first to San Pedro bay, and then taking a three-hour trip on the steamer "Hermosa," of about twenty-seven miles on the ocean. Arriving at the beautiful bay and city of Avalon, we took the mountain coach, and came to an abrupt mountain where we got in an incline car and went up a distance of 300 feet overlooking the city and bay. We then returned and went in glass bottomed boats to view the wonders of the sea, where rocks, cliffs, fishes and seaweeds of all colors were to be seen—a diver going down for specimens at 25 cents a dive. We went out to where the water was 60 feet deep and clear as crystal, and a most wonderful sight.

Next in order was a visit to the Ostrich farm at Pasadena. One large fellow whose name was Edward the VII, weighed 325 lbs. We were informed that there were no divorcees among the ostriches, two being mated for life. There were one hundred and fifty ostriches on the farm, thirty of which were babies.

From the ostrich farm we went to Mount Lowe; got in an incline railway and went up a distance of 3,000 feet almost perpendicular on an endless chain cable; 62 degree incline. The tested strength of cable was 100 tons, and safety cable 125 tons. Direct ascent of the great incline being 1325 feet. We held our breath and tried to say our prayers, but we landed on top safely, and were soon on the Mount Lowe division Pacific Electric Railway, on which we ascended to Alpine Tavern. We were then at an elevation of 5,000 feet, and above the clouds.

The scenery was indescribable, and we thought of the words—"What is man that thou art mindful of him!"

As it was raining, we deferred our donkey ride to the top of Mount Lowe, (which was 1000 feet from Alpine Tavern) to some future time.

Our balloon route trip was taken on a special car, the gift of Mrs Kate J. Willats. On that excursion, we were joined by Mr and Mrs Harvey of Jackson, who were visiting in Los Angeles at that time. In this trip we visited the Soldiers' Home, where 2500 soldiers of the Civil war are being cared for. Stopping long enough at Hollywood to visit the garden and studio of Paul de Longpre, of which words fail to describe. We were soon on our way to Redonda, the car stopping at all points of interest, and waiting for us to gather moonstones at Moonstone beach. A dinner was prepared for us by telegraphing the day previous, at Hotel Playa del Ray where the tables were spread in a glass inclosed porch where the waves of the ocean could be seen breaking and dashing while we were eating.

From Redonda we went to Venice, a beautiful city seemingly built in water, surrounded by the ocean and lagoons, and at night, when lighted up by its millions of electric lights, its splendid bath house and dancing casino, the latter bringing in $1,000 per month to its owner Mr Fraiser, was truly a scene from fairland. Mr Fraiser had prepared a famous fish dinner, gave us a free plunge in the bathhouse, and we were admitted free of charge to the casino, where we watched the dancing until 11 p. m., when we got on our car and made a short cut to Los Angeles in half an hour.

Another excursion was formed, and we went to San Diego, a prosperous city, where we were entertained in a royal manner by members of Southern Star. Attended the Pick Wick Theatre, and had the pleasure of seeing Rob Adams in the play of "Zaza." We also met Mrs Adams and Mr and Mrs Agard. Had a view of the first Mission of San Diego in the distance. Staying one night only in San Diego, we went into Mexico, where we paid for a dinner we could not eat, and after buying post cards and souvenirs and being held up in the custom house, we returned to American soil, and to American people, very glad that we were still alive.

In conclusion, I would say that our delightful Southern trip was due to the loving kindness and thoughtfulness of Mrs Kate J. Willats, our chaperone and grand secretary for the past twenty-five years and who was, I am glad to say, re-elected.

Augusta F. Fleming.

What Esnah's Father Did.

By HAROLD CHRISTY.

Copyrighted, 1907, by P. C. Eastmont.

"I may have saved your life," declared Avie earnestly.

"What's life when your boots are muddy and no chance to get them cleaned?" scoffed Ned Hastings. "I'd rather take chances on walking under a ladder than going out in the muddy street to escape the hoodoo."

"I think you're horrid," pouted Avie. "Next time I shall let you go under the ladder if you want to, but don't blame me for what happens."

"Next time you'll do just the same," he declared, with a laugh. "I never saw any one quite so superstitious in my life."

"You must have spilled salt," said Avie dolorously, "and you never threw any over your left shoulder. I just know that there is going to be a quarrel."

"Not unless we meet with more ladders over the sidewalk," he laughed, "or some other of your numerous signs of evil luck."

It was a tactful remark well qualified to fulfill Avie's prophecy, but at that moment the girl darted forward and picked something from the sidewalk.

"It's the best kind of luck to find money on a Monday," she declared. "It means that you will gain all the week."

"It's good luck to find a pocketbook on the 1st of April," he scoffed. "It means you will be fooled for a year."

It was fortunate for Hastings that the girl did not hear him. Superstition was a dangerous subject between them. Hastings would not confess to his few little superstitions and was intolerant of her lore of signs and omens. Once she had declined his offer of marriage because he spoke on one of her unlucky days, and when he had again put his fate to the test on a day guaranteed by the almanacs to be most lucky she had recalled the couplet about a change of name though not of letter being a change for worse and not for better and had said "No," though her heart cried "Yes."

"ARE YOU ESNAH, SON OF HAMID?" SHE DEMANDED.

Just now she was too busy examining the contents of the pocketbook to give heed to his flings. There were two five-dollar bills, a two and two ones. The rest of the bulk was made up of papers covered with strange characters that neither could make out.

There was not a scrap of paper to show the name of the owner.

"Maybe they are charms," said Avie in an awed voice.

"It's not Hebrew," said the mere practical Hastings. "It may be Arabic. I saw some writing once that looked like that."

"We must advertise it," she announced. "It belongs to some mystic, and there is no telling what may happen."

"He should be clever enough to find it himself if he is a wonder worker," scoffed Hastings. "I'll bet he sells rugs from house to house or nougat from a stand."

Avie frowned at his levity, and until they reached home she could talk of nothing but the pocketbook and its mysterious owner. As they parted at the foot of the steps Hastings caught her hand.

"You won't forget that we are going to the boat club reception tonight?" he begged. "Don't get so completely wrapped up in your magi that you forget me."

"I'll be ready," she assured him, with sudden penitence. "I will be ready at 8. Will that be time enough?"

"Just right," he agreed. "I'll be here on the moment."

He turned away and went off up the street. This was the first reception given by his boat club in its new house, and it was the event of the year to its members. For three months they had been preparing for it, and Hastings was all excitement.

He was at the house five minutes before 8 with a huge bouquet, but his face fell when Avie came into the room in the same cloth dress she had worn that afternoon.

"I didn't forget," she cried as she noted the disappointment in his face,

"but I must go downtown first. I am in such terrible danger, Ned."

"What is the matter?" he cried in alarm, forgetting the reception for a moment. For answer she held out a paper.

"Let me read this," she commanded. "Listen: 'Esnah, son of Hamid, lost his pocketbook. If the finder does not return the same, Esnah, son of Hamid, will do even as did his father before him.'"

Hastings smiled. "Where is the danger?" he demanded.

"He says," she went on, "three days will be allowed, and this is Saturday's paper. That means that unless he gets it tonight he will—oh! I don't know what he will do. That is what makes it so terrible."

"And you mean to say that he has frightened you into taking the pocketbook back tonight. Give it to me, and I will take it over in the morning. I'll take chances on the curse."

"But he says 'the finder,'" she persisted. "I'm the finder. We must go at once, Ned."

For a moment disappointment and impatience struggled with love. Then the saving sense of humor came to his relief, and he threw back his head and laughed.

"Get your things on," he said when his laughter died, "and we will hunt up this sorcerer of the pleasant promises. Perhaps we can get to the reception before it closes anyway."

They found the address with some difficulty. It was a curio shop in the foreign quarter, and through the jumble of rugs, Turkish slippers and hookahs in the window Esnah, the son of Hamid, could be seen puffing away at his cigarette.

He came forward politely as they entered, turning to Hastings for information as to his wants. Avie pressed eagerly forward.

"Are you Esnah, son of Hamid?" she demanded. "Are you the man who lost the purse?"

"I am he," said the Egyptian, with a flash of his white teeth beneath the black mustache.

Avie's face fell. She had anticipated a man wrapped in mystic robes sitting over a brazier on which bubbled a caldron. He was a very ordinary shopkeeper without even a fez to lend local color.

"There were in the purse $14 and some most important papers. It was of red leather, with a strap," he went on. "This must be yours," she said as she passed over the purse.

"I am most obliged," said Esnah, sharply scrutinizing the couple. He could see that a money reward was not sought. "May I offer the lady a slight souvenir token of appreciation of her goodness?"

"Have you a lucky charm?" she asked, turning from the gay scarfs he was fingering.

Esnah smiled and went to the rear of the store, where the safe stood. It was not the first time a charm had been requested. He drew from a drawer an odd looking stone. It was one of many that came from Germany and cost $8 a gross, but Avie received it reverently and tucked it into her pocketbook with elaborate care.

Esnah stood politely in the attitude of one whose business is concluded and who waits only to be dismissed. But Avie was not through. She wandered about the store looking at the stock and making a few small purchases to justify her curiosity until at last she gained courage.

"Please," she said softly. Esnah was all attention.

"I want to know," she went on hurriedly, "what your father did to the thief who took his pocketbook and did not return it?"

"My father was Hamid, son of Akkar," began the Egyptian. "To the merchants of Alexandria he was well known. One day in the market place he lost his wallet. For three days he told his loss, and then on the third day—"

"Yes," Avie was almost leaning over the counter.

"On the third day," repeated Esnah, "he decided that he would see his pocketbook no more, so he went and bought another."

"Ned," said Avie softly as they came in sight of her home, "if you promise never to tell!"

"I won't rub it in," he promised. "Then I'll marry you if you still want me. I guess I'm cured of superstition."

Seeing the Point.

The following story is told of a Philadelphia millionaire who has been dead some years: A young man came to him one day and asked pecuniary aid to start him in business.

"Do you drink?" asked the millionaire.

"Once in awhile."

"Stop it. Stop it for a year and then come and see me."

The young man broke off the habit at once and at the end of the year came to see the millionaire again.

"Do you smoke?" asked the successful man.

"Now and then."

"Stop it. Stop it for a year and then come and see me again."

The young man went home and broke away from this habit. It took him some time, but finally he worried through the year and presented himself again.

"Do you chew?" asked the philanthropist.

"Yes, I do," was the desperate reply.

"Stop it. Stop it for a year and then come and see me again."

The young man stopped chewing, but he never went back again. When asked by his anxious friends why he never called on the millionaire again, he replied that he knew exactly what the man was driving at. "He'd have told me that now that I have stopped drinking and smoking and chewing I must have saved enough to start myself in business—and I have."

SCIENTIFIC MISCELLANY

Reported weekly for the Ledger.

A Mediterranean Mystery.—Novel Iron-Making.—Glass Lifting By Magnets.—Genius Not From Young Parents.—Forests for the Future.—Paint from Iron Waste.—Making Black Diamonds.—Mussel Poison.—A Water Fed Light.

Investigating the mysterious noises common in Italy, where they are known as "brontidi," Prof. T. Alippi, of the Urbino observatory, has sent inquiries to 217 persons, of whom 135—in various parts of Italy and its African colonies—have noticed the phenomenon. The sounds which resemble the rumble of distant explosions, are popularly explained as echoes from strong tides at sea. They occur usually in the afternoon, both summer and winter, with a bright sky and calm air, but are supposed to give warning of bad weather. Prof. Alippi finds no evidence that they are due to mine explosions or gun firing. They occur chiefly in central mountainous regions, but do not seem to be caused by wind or thunder, and the investigator is still in doubt as to whether they result from meteorological or earthquake causes.

In his new iron-making process, Dr. G. P. Laval, of Stockholm, finely pulverizes the ore, coal and other materials, and causes them to be drawn by a current of air or carbonic oxide in a continuous stream from the hopper through a delivery pipe into the furnace. The furnace is a vertical cylinder, with a tap-hole for the iron and an escape-hole for the gas near the base. The coal is burned to carbonic oxide in the upper part of the furnace, and the slag and reduced iron collect on the furnace wall and flow down to the lower end. The magnetic crane or derrick for hoisting glass, patented by C. T. Dodds, has a suitable electromagnet, with a plate or pieces of iron forming an armature. The armature is placed under the glass, and raises and transports it through the attraction of the magnet.

That genius is usually inherited from parents of middle age and seldom by eldest children is the view that Dr. Louise G. Rabinovitch, of New York, sought to prove at the recent International Congress on Psychiatry at Amsterdam. From the biographies of 42 great writers and poets, she found that only 6 were the eldest children; of 17 painters, only 1 was the first-born of his mother; and of 15 musicians, but 2 were first-born. The men and women of genius, moreover, have been almost always the youngest or next to the youngest of the family. Coleridge, Washington Irving, Daniel Webster, Rembrandt, Rubens, Richard Wagner, and Mozart were each the last of six to thirteen children; Benjamin Franklin, the last of seventeen and last-born of the last-born for several generations; Schumann, the last of five; George Eliot, the last of four; Balzac, the last of three; Napoleon, the eighth and probably the last; Joshua Reynolds, the seventh; Edwin Landseer, the fifth of seven; J. Fenimore Cooper, the eleventh of twelve; Schubert, the thirteenth of fourteen.

Forest-building offers opportunities to the wealthy philanthropist seeking a change from the endowment of colleges and libraries. The creation of new forests to replace those that have vanished is two slow and costly to be undertaken by many owners of private lands, and only government aid or donations from capitalists are likely to make effective any plan for an adequate future timber supply. Much might be done by bounties for tree planting, with the judicious offer of prizes for the best results. The intelligent competition that would result would not only increase the forest area, but would lead to greater production per acre, and doubtless to improvement in the tree varieties grown for timber and special purposes.

A new blue-black paint for protecting iron-work is obtained from adding ammonia to the waste chloride of iron solution obtained in preparing iron and steel for wire-drawing, galvanizing and tinning. The oxide of iron precipitated proves a valuable pigment, while the chloride of ammonia produced is likewise useful.

The apparatus for making black diamonds lately patented in France by M. Bonnet, consists of a vessel of bronze or other metal, with two carbon electrodes, between which is a rod of pure carbon, while beneath the rod is a small vessel containing carbon bisulphide. The passage of a slight electric current vaporizes the carbon bisulphide. A high-tension current passed through the hermetically closed vessel causes the vapor to yield a high pressure, and also fuses the carbon rod, which under the great pressure is crystallized into black diamonds.

A French inquiry following thirteen cases of illness with two deaths has shown that the liver of the edible mussel at times contains a poison—unaffected by cooking—that acts upon animals like curare. The fish, eels and sea urchins from the same basin were not toxic, but the star fish were, and both mussels and star fish that were poisonous on May 26 and June 11 were harmless when eaten on July 8. Whether this temporary toxicity is due to contaminated food or is the result of disease has not been determined.

The water torch lately discussed by Swiss scientists consists of a metal cylinder of calcium carbide, with a generator of self-igniting phosphuretted hydrogen, which sets fire to the acetylene produced when the carbide is wet. Thrown 3000 yards by a special gun, the torch burns from 50 minutes to three hours with a light of 100 to 300 candle power. It is suggested that such torches would protect battleships from night surprise, and that one attached to a life-belt would enable a drowning person to find the belt.

In a new process of saving tin,* the scrap is carried by a conveyor continuously through a metallic U-shaped basket suspended in an electrolyte, the tin scrap forming a moving anode, while cathode plates are held in the liquid.

Do You Think For Yourself?

Or, do you open your mouth like a young bird and gulp down whatever food or medicine may be offered you?

Is not an intelligent thinking woman, in need of relief from weakness, nervousness, pain and suffering, then it means much to you that there is one tried and true honest medicine of known composition, sold by druggists for the cure of woman's ills.

The makers of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, for the cure of weak, nervous, run-down, over-worked, debilitated, pain-racked women, knowing this medicine to be made up of ingredients, every one of which has the strongest possible endorsement of the leading and standard authorities of the several schools of practice, are perfectly willing, and in fact, are only too glad to print, as they do, the formula, or list of ingredients, of which it is composed, in plain English, on every bottle-wrapper.

The formula of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will bear the most critical examination of medical experts, for it contains no alcohol, narcotics, harmful, or habit-forming drugs, and no agent enters into it that is not highly recommended by the most advanced and leading medical teachers and authorities of their several schools of practice. These authorities recommend the ingredients of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for the cure of exactly the same ailments for which this world-famed medicine is advised.

No other medicine for woman's ills has any such professional endorsement as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has received, in the unqualified recommendation of each of its several ingredients by scores of leading medical men of all the schools of practice. Is such an endorsement not worthy of your consideration?

A booklet of ingredients, with numerous authoritative professional endorsements by the leading medical authorities of this country, will be mailed free to any one sending name and address with request for same. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Land and Mineral Decisions.

(Reported by Woodford D. Harlan, Land Attorney, Washington, D. C.)

Coal lands.—The affidavit at the time of purchase must be made by the claimant himself. A declaratory statement for coal land cannot be filed for unsurveyed land. A second declaratory statement for coal land cannot be filed in the absence of a valid reason for failure to perfect title under the first.

Mineral Practice.—In proceedings under a protest against an agricultural entry, in which the mineral character of the land is alleged, the burden of proof is with the agricultural claimant, if the land is returned as mineral in the surveyor general's report then in force.

Mining Claim.—Assignments of interests in mining possessions are valid even by parol transfer.

Limitation of Acreage.—The limitation in acreage prescribed by the act of August 30, 1890 does not include timber and stone lands.

Relinquishment.—When filed in local office operates co-instantly to release the land from the entry.

Repayment.—Right to, not saved because payment was made under protest.

Residence and Domicile.—The place of one's domicile determines the place of his residence.

SAN FRANCISCO ELECTION.

After a bitter contest, [the municipal election in San Francisco resulted in the success of mayor Taylor and his associates on the good government or non-partisan ticket by large majorities. Taylor defeated McCarthy, the labor union candidate, by about 11,000 votes; Ryan, the straight-out republican nominee, was a poor third. Langdon, for district attorney, beat his opponent McGowan by over 16,000. The outcome will help to restore confidence in San Francisco, which has been so badly shattered since the fire by the graft revelations and the disgraceful riots arising out of the strike of the street-car men. All classes outside of the members of the trade organizations—and many of them have had their fill of dabbling in politics—are rejoiced at the signal defeat of the labor union ticket. That element, represented by Schmitz and his boodling board of supervisors, has made the sorriest mess in government affairs that has been witnessed in recent years in any large city in the United States. They developed an amazing capacity for grafting; followed it as a matter of business. Another term of that reign would have shaken San Francisco—rising splendidly from her ashes—almost as badly as earthquake and fire. It would have been a solar plexus blow at a most critical time. Seeing this, citizens, throwing aside party affiliations, supported the set of candidates deemed most likely to avert such an overwhelming disaster. The salvation of the city from the gang of looters was the overshadowing issue. There were strong objections urged against the successful ticket. The course of the graft prosecution, which is behind the candidates, has many features open to question. But the voters have unquestionably acquitted themselves the best they could under the circumstances, declaring with no uncertain voice for clean government and the upbuilding of the city.

NO FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

The Ledger has been asked repeatedly of late why the authorities of the city of Jackson have failed to publish a statement showing the receipts and disbursements of the local government. We frankly confess that we are unable to give a satisfactory answer to these inquiries. Jackson has been an incorporated city for nearly two years, and still not a statement has been given showing the amount of revenue that has been collected and how it has been expended. All information on these subject has been gleaned from the unofficial minutes of proceedings published as an item of news after each meeting of the trustees. All that we can say in further elucidation is that we have several times inquired for this document from the clerk, and have been told that a statement had been made to the board—presumably for the first year—but it was not in shape for publication. We could, no doubt, insist upon seeing it, and transcribe and publish it on our own account, but we prefer that it should come before the taxpayers in the regular way—officially authenticated. It is anything but commendable that at the outset of local government, a vitally important duty of this character should be so long ignored. We herewith give the law bearing on this question. Section 879 of article IV., bearing on municipal corporations of the sixth class, reads:

He (the clerk) shall make a quarterly statement in writing showing the receipts and expenditures of the city or town for the preceding quarter, and the amount remaining in the treasury. He shall, at the end of every fiscal year, make a full and detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures of the preceding year, and a full statement of the financial condition of the affairs of the city or town, which shall be published.

LOCAL FINANCIAL SITUATION.

The local banks do not feel the money stringency as elsewhere. A gold-producing county like Amador, which is surrendering gold at the rate of $150,000 per month, has a big advantage over other sections in times of financial unrest like the present. We are producing the money metal in sufficient quantities to meet all the demands of local business. Still the banks are disposed to pursue a conservative policy to protect their depositors in the face of existing conditions. Checks drawn on San Francisco banks or firms have been largely used in payment of wages of mine employees. These have been readily cashed by local banks, which in turn depended upon their prompt payment in coin by the city banks. But the suspension of specie payment in the financial centers has forced a modification in this respect. The checks are taken for collection. Depositors pay in checks as cash, and their drafts are honored in coin in the usual course of business as heretofore, but the discounting of checks for the general public is hardly in order. We presume, if the bullion from the mines was handled through the banks here, there would be no hesitation in discounting all the pay checks from such mines. As this is not generally done, the banks here cannot be expected to throw their vaults wide open for the invasion of checks, while San Francisco banks are enforcing the closure system.

The elections in thirteen eastern and southern states were determined largely by local questions, and are without much political significance. Republican states went republican by heavy majorities. As a rule democratic states did likewise, except Kentucky, which elected a republican governor.

HOW SAN FRANCISCO IS BEING REBUILT

San Francisco, November 1.—The financial storm which has been sweeping over the country is reflected in San Francisco in a very insignificant way. The era of speculation in the East, which is credited with bringing on the present flurry, did not reach San Francisco, owing to the fact that this city was bending all its energies, and utilizing all its money in rebuilding the area that had been devastated by the great fire. While enormous sums of money were needed and are still needed in San Francisco for reconstruction purposes, all that has been invested has gone into legitimate enterprises that have nothing of the speculative in their character, consequently, except for the strain caused by a shortage of cash, the crisis has been of no detriment to the city. This was evidenced by the fact that, while the governor of the state felt it wise to offer protection by declaring holidays, all of the banks continued to transact their regular business.

The temporary suspension of the California Safe Deposit and Trust Company is not regarded among the local financial institutions as meaning anything more than a matter of protection of the interests of depositors.

The banks of San Francisco have on deposit in Eastern banks large amounts. This puts them in a strong position, for they are calling on Eastern banks for cash which is arriving at the rate of about $1,000,000 a day.

It is to be noted in this connection that notwithstanding the flurry and shortage of cash, there has been no stoppage of work of any kind in San Francisco. At the banks checks for pay rolls are promptly paid in gold, as well as are those for ordinary commercial transactions. For large transactions, involving great amounts, clearing house certificates are used in lieu of cash, serving the same purpose. An investigation into conditions through the state, made by the California promotion committee, shows an era of extraordinary crops; with record high prices paid to agriculturists for them. This has brought an immense amount of money into the state which has greatly increased the deposits of the interior as well as city banks. It is this condition of self dependence to which Californians have always been accustomed, that has prevented any flurry or crisis in this state during the present strained condition in the east.

Full comprehension of what has been done in San Francisco can be had only after a thorough and careful analysis of the building that has been going on for the past eighteen months. There is a general idea that great work has been done, but the character of that work is little understood. It must first be remembered that 28,188 buildings were destroyed, which had an estimated value of $105,000,000. These buildings covered an area of four and seven-tenths square miles. Since the fire permits have been asked for 9,000 permanent buildings at an estimated value of $100,000,000.

It will be seen that buildings to the number of one-third of those destroyed will cost within $50,000,000 of the value of all that were burned. In other words the present character of buildings so far surpasses those that were destroyed that if the same ratio of increased cost be maintained the new city will cost three times the value of the old.

In this connection the contention has been made that there is an excessive increase in the cost of building, owing to high wage and increased price of building material. Investigation into these conditions shows that the present cost of building in San Francisco is less than one percent higher than that of similar buildings in either Chicago or New York. Wages have returned to nearly the normal of before the fire, while building material is the same as before the fire.

The following figures will give an idea of what has been done in San Francisco since the fire:

Cash paid for improvements since the fire	$130,000,000
Estimated value of buildings for which permits have been asked	100,000,000
Total bank clearings since the fire (over)	2,500,000,000
Total insurance in burned district	235,000,000
Total insurance paid	190,000,000

Paid to building trades labor since the fire	56,410,000
Total deposits in San Francisco banks	331,398,719
Total deposits in California banks	676,705,496
Total deposits in San Francisco savings banks (included in above)	157,739,812
Average deposits in San Francisco savings banks per capita	350
Population of four bay cities before the fire (estimated)	635,000
Population of four bay cities now (estimated)	710,000
Increase in eighteen months since the fire	75,000
Cost of building in San Francisco normal
Permanent buildings completed	6,000
Permanent buildings in course of construction	3,000
